Currently, Argosy University is divided into four colleges: College of Business; College of Education; College of Psychology and Behavioral Sciences; and the College of Health Sciences. Argosy University instructors bring more than just a textbook and a syllabus to the classroom. They bring valuable real-world experience. The American School of Professional Psychology, home to the University's numerous psychology programs resides within the College of Psychology and Behavioral Sciences with the majority of courses taught by doctoral-level, practicing counselors and psychologists. Faculty in the College of Business are practicing professionals and business leaders. The College of Education faculty are experienced educators dedicated to helping their students further develop their skills and reach their goals. And in the College of Health Sciences licensed practitioners work in the fields they teach. Program availability and credential level varies by campus.

Through Argosy University's College of Business, students will acquire the tools needed to compete and succeed in the complex business environment of today and tomorrow. They will learn not just how to manage companies, but how to lead people by integrating business principles with psychology and behavioral sciences. Degrees offered through the College include bachelor's degree, master's degree, and doctoral degree in business administration, as well as bachelor's degree completion programs.

Programs offered through Argosy University's College of Education are conducted in a collaborative environment designed to encourage innovation. Students are able to explore the historical, philosophical, psychological, technical, theoretical and practical aspects of education and institutional administration. Degree concentrations offered through the College include instructional leadership, education leadership, and community college executive leadership.

Courses in Argosy University's College of Psychology and Behavioral Sciences help students develop the specific competencies required of clinical practitioners. The schools' curriculum encompasses every major theoretical modality that guides clinical assessment and intervention practices. Practical training and internships provide the hands-on experience that is a hallmark of the programs' curriculum. The College of Psychology and Behavioral Sciences offers a wide array of disciplines, including psychology, clinical psychology, marriage & family therapy, counseling psychology, forensic psychology, guidance counseling, professional counseling, school psychology, sport-exercise psychology, organizational leadership, and pastoral community counseling.

Argosy University's College of Health Sciences offers Associate of Applied Science and Associate of Science degrees that blend clinical training and medical education in order to meet the burgeoning demand for well-educated and trained allied health professionals. Students can study in the areas of dental hygiene, medical laboratory technology, radiation therapy, diagnostic media sonography, histotechnology, medical assisting, radiologic technology, and veterinary technology.
